At the beginning of the 21st century and the balance of world power had shifted to the northern Hemisphere. In the countries of the south, faced with an energy crisis and the possibility of starvation, a deep-seated animosity towards the north-developed. Anti-north terrorist incidents became commonplace. In response, the leaders of the northern countries created an international peace-keeping force in the name of the "Northern Hemisphere Treaty Alliance" (NHTA) as a deterrent against any aggressive military behavior from the south.

That day, before the funeral service, I saw a young woman, whom I had never met before, standing behind a crowd of people at a park bench, weeping and screaming. I was concerned that she might be a danger to herself, so I took her to the hospital. She was a young woman, and she was in the back of the funeral home.

Particular from post-mortem examination suggested that there had been an explosion in the engine room. But still, the ship remained afloat.

Assigned special judges and a load of buffet tables, NTA dispatched an emergency committee to check the site. The first to arrive included: members of the NTA, Robert Ayres (Austin) and Captain Nicholas Lung from the Speed of Sound group, Robert Hill and Bobbie from the International Research Institute.

A Special Forces team made up of Sergeant Jack Ingles, who volunteered himself, and Justice Marjorie, from the Information Department, was dispatched. Had this team known of the horror that they were about to face, maybe they would not have made the journey at all.

➤ Dispatched to South Korea from the USA's experimental Special Forces by the Marine Corps, Jack is having his first of two Special Forces missions. He's used to the US army working as a ground force. Jack's never seen what the war is like. He looks at General Bledsoe as a father, and is shocked when without any warning, he's pulled from command. He has a great sense of humor for his young age and is most surprising, he has been through many war experiences and still carries the name of hero.

His destiny is not over yet. However, Jack needs the support of his wife.
